

WorldCare ACCESS Specialty^{RX}

Remote second opinion service

The need

The rapidly increasing complexity and sky-rocketing costs of specialty drugs are straining medical networks and presenting patients with unique delivery and side-effect issues. In countries such as the United States, Canada and Australia, specialty drugs represent approximately two percent of claims¹. Yet this accounts for more than thirty percent of total medication expenditures and continues to rise.

- In Canada, 42 percent of drug spending, or $5.6 billion, will be on specialty drugs by 2020²
- In the United States, spending on specialty drugs has increased by $54 billion dollars over the past five years, accounting for 73 percent of all medicine spending growth³
- In Australia, the government spent more than $311 million dollars on just 176,062 Adalimumab (used to treat arthritis and Crohn's disease) prescriptions between July 2014 and June 2015⁴
